Martin enters the room. It is too late. Samatha is on the floor. She is lying dead with deep bite marks on the neck and arms. Her naked body is bruised and you can smell the odor of strong fragrance for men.

Her clothes are so torn as if she was attacked by twenty angry wolves. Seeing his beloved dead, Martin's eyes fill up with big, salty tears. His heart is breaking. His head is full of thoughts and reminiscences of the latest moments spent together. He feels a deep remorse for leaving her alone. Everything might have been different if he hadn't slammed the door in her face. Nothing's to be done. Soon almost all the most beautiful women in the town will be killed by vampires. Nobody can stop them from killing as their bodies soaked up with blood are very strong.

Martin is breathless. He can't stop crying. His head is to blow up. Unconsciously he runs to the study, opens an old drawer, pulls out a gun, points it directly at his temple and saying good-bye pulls the trigger.

As morning has dawned, Monique gets up out of bed and looks out of the window. Everything around, including the road, cars and pillars, are overgrown with plants and weeds. Embarrassed she runs to the parents' bedroom. She finds no one there but the plant, a very big plant. It was no larger than a palm the day she saw it. But now...

Puzzled she runs out and sees nothing but greenery everywhere. She can hardly see the road. The phone does not work. Monique gets frightened. Suddenly she notices a dead body. Many dead bodies! Panic-stricken and breathless she gets scared stiff. The truth is that plants have regained the earth and now are emitting poisonous gasses fatal for people. Not a single person around. She is absolutely alone.

As usual in the evening Emily and her boyfriend Noy are walking in the park. However, this time Noy is upset and it is obvious that something worries him. Noy wants to tell Emily that his parents are planning to move to Norway because of his father's job and that he loves her so much and is unwilling to leave her.

Emily will be completely alone because not long ago both of her parents died in the accident.

Having summoned all his courage he tells her that he is leaving for Norway. Emily thinks that Noy has fallen in love with another girl and with tears in her eyes runs out home, packs her belongings and leaves for her grandparents who live in the village.

The next day Noy and his parents fly to Norway, where he starts his new life. After two years he comes back to Lithuania because he feels homesick. He gets employed in a furniture company where he meets Emily. Though Noy explains why he left her, Emily is indifferent and reproaches him if he had loved her he would never have left her alone.

Ema arrives in a small town called Paradise Corner. She wants to start her new life here. In her old school she wanted to run away from the bullying she experienced. Though she isn't pretty, she is kind. She hopes everything will be all right in a new place. However, the first day in the new school is not easy. Even in this school she is bullied again.

One day, after classes she goes to the cloakroom. Suddenly a group of peers run to her and start hitting, pushing, throwing her things on the ground. All at once a man's voice tells them to stop. They run away. Ema kneels down and starts collecting her belongings. A guy comes closer, hands in her biology textbook and looks at her. Ema feels something like butterflies in her stomach hears only him and shiver runs down her body and she wants that moment to last forever. She begins to tell him that it is not the first time she has been bullied. After their conversation she understands that she has fallen in love from the first sight. But she even doesn't know his name.

The next day she looks for the guy everywhere and nearly loses hope to find him. Out of the blue she feels a tap on her shoulder and a familiar voice:

"At last I have found you. Everything is going to be OK. I will always stay with you."

From that day on Ema realizes what real friendship means and how good is it to be loved.

Laura has never trusted anybody but her childhood friend Andrew. Unfortunately, today is the day when a year ago he mysteriously disappeared.

That night they were together celebrating their first day of summer holidays in his house with other three friends. At midnight they decided to go to sleep.

In her dream she felt a gust of fresh air coming through the open door. Having got up and not seeing Andrew anywhere, she woke up the friends and they all went out to look for him in the yard. But there was only an old oak tree and an empty old bench under it in full moon. Frightened by dead silence the friends came back into the house and went to sleep with the hope that Andrew will appear in the morning.

However, today Andrew is still missing.

In ancient time Armstrong's clan could boast its fortune, fame and their strong and mighty descendants. The Armstrongs had always had tense relationships with the Smiths' clan. The Smiths' envied the Armstrongs' exclusivity and respect. For years they had been planning how to get rid of the heir of the clan. Finally, they succeeded in fulfilling their bloody plan by getting rid not only of the heir of the opposing clan but also of the majority of the clan. Only a few of them survived and managed to escape.

Jane was ready. Trying to stay inconspicuous she slid along the corridor until finally she reached his room. Without hesitation she burst into the room. She knew that that night those who had deprived her of her family power, fame and conferment would suffer torments. She was the heir back from a deathbed.

With a slight movement of her hand Jane hurled Smiths' descendant forcefully against the wall and started to strangle and stifle him with the hand. Breathless the young man struggled but hopelessly he could hardly stammer out a word. Jane's ultimate knock down made him choke with blood and close his eyes.

"Mother, I have done what you asked me," groaned Jane letting the dead body flop down on the floor like a rag. She knew she had enough time to escape before Smiths' henchmen caught her. Without hesitation she dashed from the room knowing that she accomplished the mission she had trained for so long.

In a few years Armstrongs' clan started to revive under Jane as a leader, when its former members, who had been on the run came back home. By her order the Smiths were murdered. It was the beginning of temporal peace among clans.

Her hands were trembling, her ears were blushing and the face was gaining colour. Ana was going to perform her first solo concert. Before going onto a stage she felt excited and nervous. In her head she repeated and repeated her mother's words, „To be scared is not good, but to be excited is natural“. She couldn't stop asking herself, if that was what she wanted, if that is the place where she wanted to be. She could calm down only recalling what she had stated all that for.

She was nine and she already knew what she wanted from life. She wanted to become a great pianist, famous worldwide, and play on the best stages. She hoped for bright future due to her deft fingers and determination.

Having stepped on the stage she felt relaxed and quit of her fears.

The first concert liberated her from the angst. A feeling like love and ebullience lurking in her stomach like butterflies or like tickle urged her to attain all her goals.
